Central is more than bricks and steel

To the Editor of the Tribune:

After teaching 19 years at Central Junior High, I find I have some strong feelings about the grand old building. I'm sentimental I admit and am amazed at the number of ex-students and parents who share my feelings. Perhaps I was more fortunate than others, but while at Central my room was warm in the winter and there were windows to raise when the days were warm. Students and I could observe the change of weather and change in the seasons in the courtyard just outside our room. I was able to close doors providing for control of the space in which my class was being instructed.

Central is more than bricks and wood, steel and concrete, books and bells, desks and blackboards, rows of lockers, the aroma of erasers, chalk, and perspiring young bodies in the gym area, waving hands and young chatter. Central is more of a spirit than a physical plant. Regardless of what is decided about the future of Central, the building will never be empty. It will be filled with memories of teachers and students long gone. Through her doors have passed future doctors, teachers, artists, home economists, novelists, athletes, musicians, secretaries, farmers, mathematicians and business tycoons with ambitions and dreams of things to come.

Central Junior High has served us well. I would be sad to see her closed or the building torn down.
